PERRY HIGH SCHOOL

Printing with Purpose: Celebrating Student Art

Perry High School turned its gym into a full-scale student gallery, using the Educator Plus Poster Printer to showcase hand-drawn artwork. By scanning and enlarging student pieces onto coated paper and matte canvas, they created a vivid display that honored student creativity in a professional way.

This project highlights how schools can blend tradition with tech to give students a platform for their voices and talents. Every sketch had its moment to shine—on a gallery wall for peers, families, and staff to appreciate.

Well done, Perry High, for turning student work into a celebration.

TECH SPOTLIGHT

Printing for a Safer School

A student at Grafton High School had a simple idea: use the Educator Plus Poster to create window coverings that add privacy and improve classroom safety. The idea gained support, was approved by school leaders, and quickly expanded into a building-wide project.

With help from classmates and support from staff, students designed and printed custom coverings for windows throughout the school. The result was a practical, low-cost safety solution made possible by the same printer used for posters.

This project shows what can happen when students have access to the right tools. The Educator Plus supports more than classroom displays. It can help solve real problems and make a lasting impact.
